BOOZE SUPPLIES MOST WORK TO POLICE COURT

Large Majority of Cases Can Be Traced More or Less Directly to Liquor

Last week was a "good" one, so far as old man become and the police business he brings were concerned. One's ordinary ecurention of liquor cases are thus in "hich drunkenness is the chief transgression, but a careful study of the police blotter shows that nearly every criminal charge can be traced, directly or indirectly, to the flowing bowl-that overflowed.

Of course, those names on the blotter which are followed by the word "detention" or "drunk" speak for themselves. Of these there were 32 from a week ago Sunday morning until last Sunday morning.

Then there were 118 arrested in that time for gambling, many of whom wooed dame fortune in "7-11." "pai kau," et cetera, after their sober and better judgment had been broken down with a few "shots in the arm" via the bottle route.

Most of the eight assault and battery arrests were the direct results of those spirits that artificially strengthen the weak backbone and make a fighter out of a natural sprinter. Some of these were men who spent their weekly wage for drink and went home to give their wife a beating instead of a steak for supper.

There was at least one arrest each for non-support, illegal sale of liquor. iarceny, murder, threatening language. malicious injury, fighting and profanity, and what one of them could not be traced more or less directly to the disastrous results produced from excessive indulgence in liquor?

The eldest daughter married to a rising young attorney is the sole exception to the family desires, but her husband is obsessed with a desire to win fame and wealth as a manipulator of stocks.

The bottom drops out of things and the father is found dead-a suicide. The family is compelled to part with its finery. The young lawyer is only held from ruin through the efforts of wife. He eventually awakes to a realization of conditions and wins back his wife's fading love through an effort almost superhuman.
